

Amir Hossein Jahanchahi, the Founding Chairman of 'Green Wave – Supporters of Freedom in Iran' was born in September 1960 to a distinguished family with a long history of service to the Iranian nation that dates back to 15th Century when his paternal ancestors were in control of vast territories that included present day Armenia, Azerbaijan, and Iraq.

His maternal Great-Grand Father was Shaikh Kaz'al, the powerful governor of Khuzestan under whose administration (prior to his downfall in the reign of Reza Shah Pahlavi) the first agreements incorporating 'the Anglo-Persian Oil Company' which constituted the birth of the Iranian petroleum industry were signed and implemented. More recently, other close members of his family have been in charge of key position within Iran's modern bureaucracy (his grand-father was the President of the High Court of Justice and his uncles have served as the Head of Iran's Central Bank and as cabinet ministers). Last but not least, Amir Hossein Jahanchahi's father was himself a former Finance Minister in the government of the late Shah of Iran as well as the Founder and Vice-President of the Pahlavi Foundation (known after the revolution as the 'Mostazefin Foundation' which today plays a major role in Iran's economic life).

Based in the UK, Amir Hossein Jahanchahi completed his education in France where he obtained his degrees in the field of Economics at Paris II University. Having worked as a financial advisor until 1986, he later became a successful real estate developer in Paris, Madrid and Barcelona before embarking on a career as a major stake holder in large public companies along with other major financial investors.

An Iranian patriot and nationalist, Amir Hossein Jahanchahi has been most concerned about the about the rapid rise of radical fundamentalism in Iran which has greatly damaged the stature and well being of the Iranian nation and placed the prospects of its future generations in serious jeopardy. Hence, his interest in politics and his gradual active involvement in political matters that began shortly in the aftermath of 911 when his first book entitled, "Defeating the Third Totalitarianism"- in which he projects modern day Islamic fundamentalism as the greatest threat to modern civilization, international order and stability since Nazism - was published in December 2001. He has since followed the publication of his first book with a series of articles in which he has warned and alerted the free world of the threat that is posed by Iran's revisionist fundamentalist regime. It is his belief that given the fact that the concept of Islamic government was born in Iran with the collusion of a duped population, it is only fitting that the Iranian people should themselves consign this failed ideology and system of government to the dustbin of history – an act that will also serve as a major eye opener to all Moslems the world over.

In September 2009, Amir Hossein Jahanchahi published his latest book entitled “The Iranian Hitler – Bringing to an End Ahmadinejad’s Dictatorship” which he followed by an appeal on 2nd October 2009 to all opposition groups - inside and outside the country as well as those inside the current regime – urging them to be prepared to work with one another once conditions are ripe for a united effort to overthrow the regime.

Finally, in a major press conference held at London’s Foreign Press Association on 19th March 2010, Amir Hossein Jahanchahi announced the launching of ‘Green Wave’ to support and help all opposition groups who were committed to regime change regardless of their political ideologies – thus making ‘Green Wave’ the first major political structure since 1979 to offer financial and logistical backing and support for any action that will be required for bringing to fruition the struggle of Iranians for the change they all seek. Also, he announced that a group of Iranian experts have been charged to submit, in the course of the next three months, a carefully planned ‘action plan’ to provide thoughtful and measured guidance to a provisional government that will take charge of the country once the current regime has been removed from office. ■